

Terms and Conditions

LEGAL NOTICE

The Publisher has strived to be as accurate and complete as possible in the creation of this report, notwithstanding the fact that he does not warrant or represent at any time that the contents within are accurate due to the rapidly changing nature of the Internet.

While all attempts have been made to verify information provided in this publication, the Publisher assumes no responsibility for errors, omissions, or contrary interpretation of the subject matter herein. Any perceived slights of specific persons, peoples, or organizations are unintentional.

In practical advice books, like anything else in life, there are no guarantees of income made. Readers are cautioned to rely on their own judgment about their individual circumstances to act accordingly.

This book is not intended for use as a source of legal, business, accounting or financial advice. All readers are advised to seek services of competent professionals in legal, business, accounting and finance fields.

You are encouraged to print this book for easy reading.

Table Of Contents

Foreword

Chapter 1:
The Basics

Chapter 2:
Having Heart

Chapter 3:
Enterprising

Chapter 4:
Being Direct

Chapter 5:
Respect

Wrapping Up

Foreword

Bravery is the thing that combines affection and might. The might factor is perhaps the more obvious of the two. If we consider bravery, we think of somebody taking bold face actions, and action is a reflection of might. All the same, the affection component of bravery is equally significant.

Law Of Attraction: The Might Of The Brave

Dare To Dream Big And Dream With A Heart!

---

Chapter 1:

The Basics

---

Synopsis

Affection is the motivational force behind bravery. It's our richest connections that prompt us to be fearless in the first place.

Behind It

Once we feel unplugged, there's no want to be brave, no cause for risk taking, and not one call to action.

Once your brain anticipates a positive long-run outcome but a damaging short-run outcome from something you might choose to do, bravery is called for to bridge the gap.

Whenever you wish to leave an unfulfilling relationship, resign from an uninspiring career, or mend an unsound body to a state of wellness, the long-run outlook might be tremendous, but you are able to also anticipate short-run challenges as you go through the conversion.

Bravery is the application of might to come through short-run challenges in order to accomplish long-run goals.

Bravery is an all-important component of conscious living as it enables us to pick out long-run gain in the face of short-run obstacles.

Without sufficient bravery, your default conduct will be to take the safe route by favoring fake security over purposeful execution.

Continue working on the stable career even though it does not satisfy you. Stay on in the disappointing relationship even while you feel lifeless inside. Swallow your destiny in life and make the better of it. Just Go with the flow and do not rock the boat.

Hopefully, the rivers of life will draw you in a positive direction. This is the mentality of cowardliness.

Once you disconnect from your heart and soul, you experience fearfulness.

If you then refuse to face your fearfulness, you unplug even more. Fearfulness isn't something to be warded off. It's the arrow directing you back to your real self. A great rule of thumb to abide by is this: whatsoever you dread, you have to sooner or later confront.

---

Chapter 2:

Having Heart

---

Synopsis

The word courage comes from the Latin cor, which stands for "heart," and this is exactly what bravery is. It's your association to your heart and soul. If you buckle under to fearfulness, you live unconsciously and unplug from your innate mightiness. It's only with bravery that you embrace the mighty being you really are.

Heart and Soul

Think about these potent words from Castaneda: Prior to you embarking on any course, ask the question: Does this course have a heart? If the reply is no, you will recognize it, and then you have to pick out a different course.

Does your course have a heart? Do you understand deep inside that your course is the correct one for you? Castaneda likewise came up with the idea: once a man ultimately recognizes that he has picked out a course without a heart, the course is prepared to kill him.

I've witnessed this materialize repeatedly with individuals who set their aspirations aside in order to go after a course with no heart. A few arrive at the decision that fame and fortune will be their top priorities, presuming that external success will sooner or later make them happy. It does not. A few resolve for unfulfilling relationships, believing that security will fill-in for affection.

It will not. Other people submerge themselves in idle amusement, hoping it may reestablish passion to their lives. It can not.

If your course bears no heart, you're on the improper course. The heart-centered course is that of bravery, not fake security. The fantasy of security is the principal aim of the fake course. It attempts to discover heart substitutes, like income and position, in the outside world.

Just remember that when you're unplugged from your heart within, you'll never discover it on the exterior. Bravery realizes that true might dwells within and that the quest for security only makes you weak.

The heart-centered course is frequently a twisting road. As soon as you believe you've figured it out, it makes a surprising turn. Even after you've discovered the course, it's simple to stray off and get sidetracked.

Once you recognize you've unplugged from your heart, stop and inquire: Where is the course with a heart? This will assist in bringing you back to your heart and soul.

What if you recognize you're on the wrong course but you don't understand how to discover the correct one? In this situation your opening move is to escape the route you're on. Just quit. If you can't see the correct course from your present location, you have to go out and search. You can't find it while you stay committed to the incorrect one.

Over many years, I've observed many individuals go through major career, relationship, and life-style changes when they eventually recognized they'd been following a heartless course that was slowly obliterating them.

A few of them changed suddenly, instantly quitting their occupations and boldly setting out in fresh directions. Other people transitioned step by step, carrying on their prior work to pay the bills while going after a new course in their free time.

The key is that those who came through burned the bridges behind them. They recognized they had to desert the heartless alternatives in order to discover the course with a heart. Burning the bridges, all the same, doesn't mean burning up the food and supplies, also. You have to do what's essential to meet your transitional needs, but move far enough that you aren't enticed to return to the heartless course.

It's amazing to see individuals reconnecting with their hearts once more.

These people feel brave, content, and free long before the outside transition has happened. Exercising their bravery reminds them what it's like to feel sincerely alive.

---

Chapter 3:

Enterprising

---

Synopsis

Bravery is a participating, here and now virtue that holds off for nothing.

Get Moving

Bravery is forever prepared to take the first step, to make the beginning move, and to get things moving. Do not wait around for a fresh job, a fresh relationship, or additional opportunities to come and find you. Get out there and actively produce what you wish. Life is ready and waiting for you to make the opening move. Utilize your might.

It's an excellent idea to consciously specify what you wish, and I highly advocate you do that, but if you don't wish something seriously enough to take direct moves towards it then what does that say about your intent?

Doesn't that paint a picture that you aren't truly devoted to it? When you're truly hungry, will you hold back patiently for food to get there, or will you get up and prepare something to eat? When your intents are significant to you, direct action gets to be part of the manifestation procedure. The most beneficial instruments of the Law of Attraction are your own body parts.

Fearfulness is the shroud of opportunity. Your biggest regrets in life won't be the errors you made; they'll be the chances you let slip through your hands by failing to take action.

Once you take the first step, you pull away the shroud of fearfulness and get a look at the opportunity that is there for you. You expose the long-run gain behind the short-run pain.

In the long haul, taking action is less painful than always being fearful. Fearfulness might be imagined, however it may bring about needless suffering in the form of irritation, worry, and tension. Such issues may last for weeks, years, or even a lifetime if they aren't rectified with action.

The discomfort of bravery, on the other hand, is temporary, and in a few cases recuperation takes only moments. The path of bravery in the final analysis cuts down on pain.

---

Chapter 4:

Being Direct

---

Synopsis

Individuals frequently take roundabout paths to their goals to downplay the risk of rejection. For instance, they'll send out feelers through out their social network to attempt to determine beforehand whether their future requests will be undisputed or declined. What will occur if they ask for the sale, the publicity, or the date? The thought is that if they may uncover a negative reaction beforehand, outright rejection may be avoided. On the other hand, if a favorable outcome appears guaranteed, then action may be taken with little risk.

Say What It Is

At first sight, this approach seems sensible. There's truly just one issue with it: it's unintelligent. It's a totally absurd plan for acquiring what you wish in life. It's feeble, dishonorable, and manipulative. Individuals who go out of their way to prevent rejection only undermine themselves in the long-term. They use enormous amounts of thought and power attempting to manipulate conditions, meanwhile leaving golden chances slip through their hands. All of this may be headed off with a couple of seconds of brave action.

If you wish something, ask for it. Assume the danger of rejection, and rally the bravery to take action anyhow. If you get declined, you'll live. You'll learn from the experience and become mightier. If you don't get declined, you'll accomplish your final result in the quickest and easiest way imaginable. When you chance rejection, either you acquire what you wish or you establish some bravery. Either way the result is favorable.

Becoming too direct may have damaging connotations, but there's no call for being annoyingly aggressive or pushy when seeking what you wish. Just be truthful, open, and candid. If the other individual doesn't react positively, then leastwise you understand where you stand. You've crystallized the situation and lined up with reality. Everything is clear. A truthful rejection is always superior to a cunning trick.

Share your views and feelings openly when you ask for what you wish. Make it simple for the other human to give you a truthful answer. For instance, when seeking a date with somebody you know, you could begin with something like this: "Sue, we've been friends awhile, and I must confess I'm beginning to have feelings for you. As a matter of fact, I like you very much. I don't know if you feel that way about me, but I'd truly like to get to know you more and see if there's a chance for us to establish a closer relationship. What are your feelings about that?" Then simply listen. If the reaction is negative, you're free to go on. If the reaction is electropositive, you can talk over the following steps.

Saying that only takes fifteen seconds of bravery. Isn't this a finer approach than constantly questioning what may have been and beating yourself up for lost opportunities? Little bursts of bravery may defeat many obstacles. What if you get declined? How will you handle the resulting embarrassment? There needn't be any embarrassment if you merely accept the result rather than protesting it.

Certainly, you may be frustrated, but take comfort in the fact that you successfully exerted your bravery. Even when you bomb, facing your concern is a favorable result in its own right. Don't fret about rejection; merely accept that it's going to occur every now and again. When somebody rejects your offer of connection, it doesn't imply you aren't loved.

How would you respond if somebody asked you for something in a really conscious, aboveboard fashion? It's a good bet that you'd either accept the request or leastwise let the other individual down gently.

Even if you have to refuse, wouldn't you have a little more respect for somebody who hits you with honesty and openness rather than covering their real feelings?

Once individuals get to know you as a straight arrow, even if they have to reject your initial requests, they'll frequently bring you new chances down the road as you've exhibited your willingness to be open and truthful. The declined date becomes a fresh ally who acts as matchmaker for you. The lost sale brings on an unforeseen referral. The refused publicity yields a better career offer. When you act straight with individuals, they'll frequently remember as directness sticks out from the crowd.

Are you attempting to live a safe life? The word safe is both an adjective and a noun. As an adjective it implies "becoming free from danger." As a noun it's "a confined storage container having a lock." If you're living the adjective, you're living the noun. Don't immobilize yourself with fake security by attempting to avoid rejection. In the long haul, building your bravery is a brighter choice than escaping from imaginary risks.

---

Chapter 5:

Respect

---

Synopsis

As well as connecting you with your might, bravery likewise brings power to your associations. When you exert your bravery, you feel more attached to your real self. Your bonds with other people form richer as well as your interactions are based in reality, affection, and might, not in untruth, indifference, or timidness. Over time, these associations get so strong that they advance you to a fresh level of awareness. At this point, you consciously dedicate yourself to principle-centered living. This dedication is called respect.

Honor

Respect isn't allegiance to a person or group. Such dedication comes from trivial bonds and casualness, but respect links up with real unconditional love in a way that surpasses separate identity.

Respect is the place where might and affection reconnect with reality. The heading force of respect is your moral sense, which is your intuitive power to distinguish right from wrong. Correct actions are lined up with reality, affection, and might. Improper actions are not lined up with these things. A sense of respect enables you to see the difference.

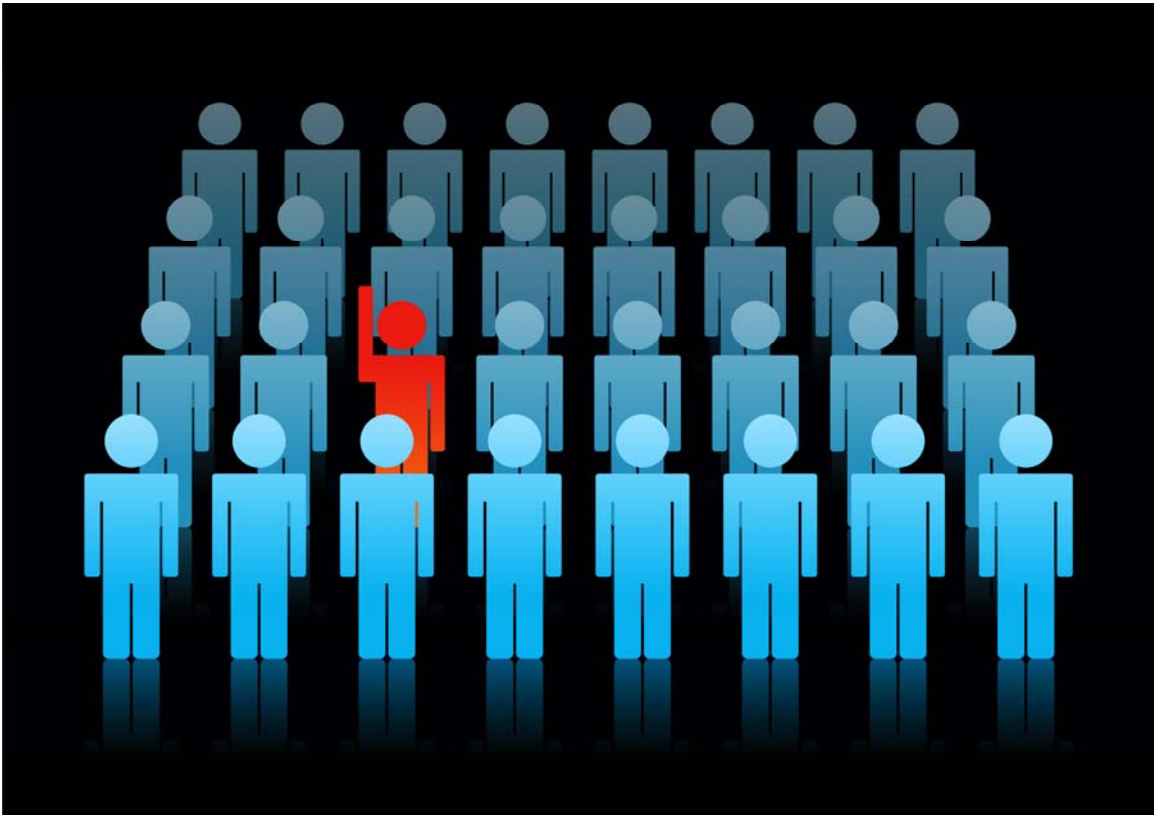

Respect realizes that service to self and service to other people are the same. They can't be otherwise. The wellness of the body and the wellness of its parts are the same. For the body to be lined up with reality, affection, and might, the parts have to be likewise so aligned.

Once you link up with the deepest pieces of yourself, you're linking up with your reality, your affection, and your might. When you link up deeply with other people, you're linking up with their reality, their affection, and their major power. Respect recognizes that these interior and outer links are the same.

To act with respect is to act in accordance with reality, affection, and might. When driven by respect, you take action as you care—you care in a way that you can't settle for not taking action. You dedicate to a principle-centered life, realizing that preserving these principles is your sacred responsibility. This duty feels correct, does good, and is good. This is the position where heart and brain harmoniously concur, where logic and intuition are lined up.

Once you're profoundly linked up with reality, affection, and major power, you're pushed to action. The more profoundly you connect, the more moved you become. The most potent motivator of all is affection, but it takes terrific bravery to respect that simple reality.

Wrapping Up

If you feel work-shy and unmotivated, the simple cause is that you're feeling unplugged. You're no longer lined up with reality, affection, and might. Once you realize that you're in this state, stop and reconnect with the true you.

Think of who you are. Reconnect with what energizes you.

Think about those times in your life when you were felling your very best—not because of outside events, but because you were lined up with your reality, your affection, and your might.

Look within and inquire: Where is the course with a heart and soul, and what may I do to respect that course right now?

Whatever answer you muster up, muster up the bravery to take prompt action. Grumble fiercely if you believe it will help, but get yourself into action never mind what.

